

Jeff W. Slattery

Instructional Associate Professor / Director of Intellectual Property & Technology Law Clinics

Jeff Slattery joined the Texas A&M University faculty in 2017 to direct the Intellectual Property and Technology Law Clinics and teach related courses.

With a focus on art, entertainment, technology, and education, he has established robust clinical programs at Thomas Jefferson School of Law, published articles, participated in panel discussions, served on non-profit boards, and appeared on public radio.

His dedication to students and the community has garnered recognition for teaching and service, including Professor of the Year and Top Attorney awards.

Prior to entering academia, he made his living as a performer and music industry professional at home and abroad, later graduating from Berkeley with honors and highest distinction before earning his J.D. at Hastings College of the Law and building a boutique art, entertainment, and technology practice.